

Biography

Patricia A. Nugent

Author and Playwright

The words the suffragists spoke in the mid-1800s still apply today; issues surrounding women's equality seem to be timeless.

A retired school district administrator and adjunct professor, Patricia A. Nugent teaches writing, journaling, spirituality, healing, and feminism courses to adult learners. Her passion lies in lifting up the voices of marginalized people.

She's the author of the book "They Live On: Saying Goodbye to Mom and Dad", and editor of the anthology "Before They Were Our Mothers: Voices of Women Born Before Rosie Started Riveting". She periodically blogs for Ms. Magazine and Vox Populi, and her work has been featured in numerous trade and literary journals. She's been a student of the women's suffrage movement for many decades, feeling a deep personal connection to those who opened up opportunities for her and other women.

She authored the play "The Stone that Started the Ripple" about a modern-day reunion of the founding suffragists. Her mission to secure feminist leaders' place in American history compels her to write and speak of their courage, brilliance, pertinacity, and determination to be silent no more.

Follow her blog at www.journalartspress.com.